Welcome
To Oakley
The City of Oakley, incorporated in 1999, came into being through an expression of community spirit—a spirit that has been a part of Oakley since its mid-nineteenth century origins. When Samuel and Sarah Sellers arrived in 1860, the land that would become Oakley was said to be hospitable only to jackrabbits and sagebrush, though today there is archeological evidence that indigenous people were the first inhabitants of the area. The sandy soil and lack of obvious natural resources did not dampen the determination of early settlers. They set up housekeeping in the midst of the chaparral and live oak, planted orchards, and went about building a town that boasted its first school in 1862, thanks to the work of Sarah Sellers. Within twenty-five years people like James O'Hara, Randolph Marsh, and Alden Norcross were dedicating their energies to creating a full-fledged town, buying and donating land on which businesses, schools, and churches were constructed. Marsh's original purchase of twelve sandy acres became Oakley Township and the streets, Main, Acme, Ruby, Star, and Home, so christened by Marsh, recall his name today. As the nineteenth century was about to become the twentieth, Oakley had deeded right of way to the Santa Fe railroad in exchange for the establishment of a depot and a sidetrack, dedicated its post office, and planted its first cash crop: almonds.

The twentieth century brought more visionary and public-spirited people to Oakley—families who built businesses and provided services to the growing community. Oakley's first hotel, library, hardware and feed store, women's club, and vineyards all came into being between 1910 and 1915. The Roaring Twenties saw Oakley's first bank open for business, the installation of streetlights, a fire that destroyed most of the town, and north of town a breech in the levee that claimed 2½ acres of farmland. The land was never reclaimed from the river and was then called, as it is now, Big Break. The Oakley spirit during the thirties and forties expressed itself in the unification of schools in the area, the building of a new Oakley School, the formation of a citizen's committee for better streets, natural gas, dial telephones, street signs, and the formation of a sewer district. As the 1950s loomed, Oakley residents could read their hometown news in the Oakley Observer, had authorized the Oakley Sanitary District to borrow $30,000 for sewer line construction, and soon had its own Chamber of Commerce. The spirit of determination and generosity that marked Oakley origins is present today as this young city plans and works for the betterment of its community, just as its earliest settlers did.
The City of Oakley was incorporated on July 1, 1999. It is located in eastern Contra Costa County, near the cities of Pittsburgh, Antioch, and Brentwood. It is 55 miles east of San Francisco and 55 miles southwest of Sacramento.
